

FROM CALIFORNIA AND SOUTH AMERICA.

Arrival of the Northern Light—Her Chase by a Pirate.

The steamship Northern Light, Capt. Tinneburgh, arrived at this port on Tuesday morning, from Aspinwall, which port she left on July 10. Capt. T. reports, July 17, at 4 p. m., lat. 34, lon. 54, made a fore-and-aft schooner-rigged propeller, steering to the westward, under steam and canvas. As soon as he espied our steamer, he altered his course so as to cut us off, to continue to change his course for that purpose till the situation in his course amounted to 16 points, or from west to south, and then to east; had the English flag flying, was an English-built vessel, with a short bowsprit and long billet-head; carried fore-and-aft, main-mast and jib; the masts were in one stick, no topmasts, and a pilot-house forward, American style. The stranger carried a heavy pressure of steam, as was ascertained by the lifting of the safety valve when the vessel rolled.

We saw at the same time a topsail schooner, with short foremast, and a hermaphrodite brig. The schooner tacked and stood astern when the steamer made for us. Taking it altogether, the maneuvers of those vessels were suspicious, to say the least. We altered our course from time to time, to keep the steamer a respectable distance. When nearest to us, he was about four miles off, when the chase, which continued for one hour and fifteen minutes, was given up, and the propeller-steered away south.
